

“Long before the giant single word Eternity was mechanically sparkled onto the iconic Sydney Harbour Bridge,” writes Peter Rahme, “it had been written over 500,000 times, manually and by the small hand of one solitary man. This one-word sermon appeared, in perfect elegant copperplate style on the pavements of Sydney’s streets, and on the footpaths of its suburbs and beyond. Wherever this word appeared, it mystified some and fascinated others. For many years the mystery remained: “who wrote it?” When the mystery writer was finally discovered, the Sydney press nicknamed him Mr. Eternity. His real name was Arthur STACE.”
